UConn fights hunger with music

By Beena Thazhampallath
Campus Correspondent

Live Aid, the worldwide,17-hour rock telethon, will be remembered not only for its objective to relieve African famine, but also as a historic musical event.

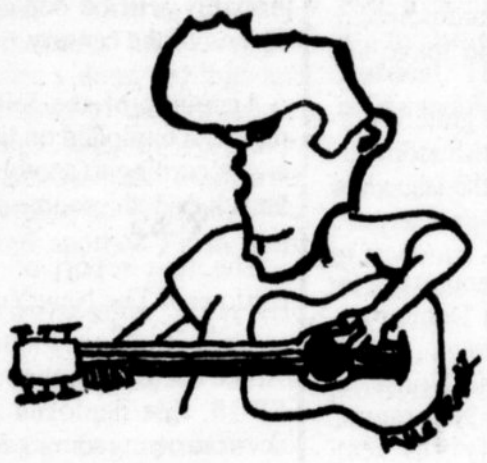
To carry on this idea, "We're starting a tradition of our very own here at UConn," Gordon Landwirth, coordinator of UConn for Africa said.

The UConn Live Aid concert, scheduled for Friday from 8 p.m. to midnight at the ROTC hanger,is the first of what UConn for Africa intends to make an annual event.

The concert will feature the bands The Rage, Grand Central, Absolute Value, and Another Day.

"The overall purpose of UConn for Africa and the National Student Campaign Against Hunger is to institutionalize the effort to fight world hunger in order to keep this effort alive, and to prevent it from becoming a passing fad," Landwirth said.

Created by UConnPIRG last August, UConn for Africa's main objective is to focus on three components: educating about hunger, raising money, and doing research.



"In a sense, we make people think, act, and learn," Dan Rioux, another organizer said.

The goal of UConn for Africa is to make a profit of $2,000 to $3,000. The concert is sponsored solely by local businesses. "At $2.50 per ticket, we're expecting a sellout crowd," Rioux said.

The bands will be volunteering their talents, and were chosen after consultation with some musicians including Andy Robbert of The Rage. "All the bands present a variety of danceable music for people who like to get up and move," Landwirth said.

The Rage primarily plays campus-wide, from residence hall dances to opening for other bands such as B. Willie Smith. Their music contains a touch of rock with a fusion of styles. It is mostly what they call "danceable funk," with a bit of jazz.

Grand Central, a vocal-oriented swing jazz group, has been together for two-and-a-half years, and has played at concerts, benefits, and weddings. They use

BBD proponents plan minority recruitment

By Bill Slocum
Daily Campus Staff

Undergraduate Student Government representative and "Bigger, Better Deal" proponent Geoff Johnson, along with Black Student Association members Brian Sheffey and Brooke Jackson, met yesterday afternoon with Dr. Ann Quinley to discuss student aid programs for minority, low income students planned by the"Bigger, Better Deal" program in conjunction with the BSA.

According to Johnson, there is a major problem today with low-income, minority students, "especially urban blacks", getting into college. "UConn does a good job recruiting minority students," Johnson said, "but there has still been a !0 percent drop in enrolling these students in recent years here at UConn." Johnson said. He added that in private, regional colleges, such enrollment has fallen by 37 percent. "Many of these kids have the skill and drive, but are intimidated by the idea of a college education," Sheffey said, "Many just need a push in the right direction. We want to make college part of their plan."

The program, Johnson said, would be run completely by UConn students and would be divided into three parts: legislative lobbying, outreach programs, and advising the university.

In the Connecticut legislature, students would make proposals to the state to create projects that would, Johnson said, "both recruit and retain minority, low-income students". Johnson said he hoped to complement this effort with outreach programs aimed both at high school students and students attending UConn.

Some UConn students would go out to high schools in low income areas to tell students about college life and UConn. University students would also create peer groups for minority

Libya retaliates: aims hit-and-run blow at Coast Guard station

TRIPOLI, Libya (AP)—Libya aimed a hit-and-run blow at a remote U.S. Coast Guard station in the Mediterranean Tuesday and summoned fellow Arabs to an "hour of revenge" against America for its predawn air raid on Libyan cities.

In its first retaliatory attack, Libya claimed to have destroyed the U.S. maritime navigation station on Italy's tiny Lampedusa island, 175 miles north of here. But U.S. officials said two missiles fired from a ship or warplane fell short.

Sporadic anti-aircraft fire crackled again over blacked-out Tripoli late Tuesday. Libyan radio claimed American warplanes had returned in a second-wave attack, but U.S. officials denied it.

Diplomats here estimated 100 people were killed in the attack on Tripoli, and doctors said the dead included Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy's adopted baby daughter.

In Washington, White House spokesman Larry Speakes described the U.S. air assaults on Tripoli and the eastern city of Benghazi as a successful blow against command centers for Libyan-sponsored terrorism. "We have sent the message to Khadafy," he said.

But in Tripoli, where many private homes were damaged, it was clear the raid also left civilian casualties.

"Those bloody Americans say they don't hit civilians," muttered Taher Gubbia, a U.S.-educated English professor outside the ruins of his house.

The raid's repercussions rippled through the Mediterranean and beyond:

—In Britain, which Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher allowed to be used as a base for the U.S. attack, opposition leaders assailed her decision. Anti-American protestors demonstrated outside U.S. diplomatic missions in West Germany, Greece, Austria and Cyprus.

"Those bloody Americans say they don't hit civilians..."

——Taher Gubbia, a U.S. educated professor outside the ruins of his house

—The Arab world denounced the military strike. Even U.S.-supported Egypt, generally hostile to Libya, expressed "alarm and strong resentment."

—At an OPEC meeting in Geneva, Libya's petroleum minister called for an oil embargo against the United States.

At 8:55 p.m. Tuesday and again a half-hour later, salvoes of anti-aircraft fire echoed over the Libyan capital, but there was no sound of warplanes or other indication of a new U.S. attack. Occasional dull explosions and repeated bursts of apparent machine-gun fire could be heard from various quarters of the capital.

20 people arrested during Yale protest

NEW HAVEN (AP)—About 20 people, most of them Yale University students, were arrested Tuesday during a sit-down protest against the school's South African investments.

New Haven police arrested the demonstrators as they sat on a sidewalk outside Yale bursar's building on College Street, where the offices of the school's investment group and John W. Buckman, school treasurer and vice president for finance, are located.

Police told the demonstrators they were obstructing the sidewalk and had one minute to move. Then they were either escorted or carried away to a police van.

Police spokesman Sgt. Walter Northrop said the group was being charged with disorderly conduct. He said authorities would not have the exact number of people arrested until later Tuesday night.

On Monday, 73 students and five others were arrested when they refused to leave a shantytown erected to protest apartheid and Yale's investments in South Africa, estimated at between $330 million to $400 million.

The university tore down the shanties after the students refused to move them.

After Tuesday's arrests, more than 40 people, the majority of them students, said they would spend at least Tuesday night on a veranda in front of the bursar's building. Earlier Tuesday, they attempted to enter the building but were blocked by Yale police.

Yale spokesman Walter Littell said he did not know what, if anything, university officials had decided to do about the group.

"We're sort of playing it by ear," he said.

Between 200 and 300 student bystanders chanted anti-apartheid slogans as those arrested were taken away.

Reagan loses key Contra aid battle

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Reagan lost a key battle over aid to Nicaragua's Contra rebels Tuesday night as the House rebuffed a Republican bid to separate the aid proposal from a spending bill Reagan may choose to veto.

The House in a near party-line 221-202 vote rebuffed an attempt by furious Republican leaders to substitute new ground rules for ones imposed by the House Democratic leadership.

The rules drafted by the Democratic majority on the House rules committee were then approved in a narrow 212-208 vote.

Republican leaders said the decision to tie the Contra aid plan to an unrelated $1.7 billion supplemental appropriations bill was a blatant political move designed to kill the aid program and leave the rebels with no U.S. support of any kind.

But Democrats said the GOP should be grateful for a second chance of obtaining aid for the anti-Sandinista guerrillas in light of the 222-210 defeat on the issue last month.

Only one Republican joined 220 Democrats to oppose Reagan's position. Twenty-seven Democrats and 175 Republicans supported the White House.

Earlier, President Reagan implored the House to approve $100 million for the rebels in Nicaragua, saying Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy has sent weapons and advisers there to "bring his war home to the United States."

As the House opened consideration of Reagan's request for military and other assistance for the rebels, the president told a group of business executives that Khadafy "has bragged that he is helping the Nicaraguans because they fight America on its own ground."

Soviet test missile may have exploded

WASHINGTON (AP) — A recent test of the latest Soviet land-based missile failed and the rocket may have exploded, an administration source said Tuesday.

U.S. officials believe the Soviets will correct whatever problems led to the failure of the missile, which is designed to succeed the SS-18, said the source who agreed to talk on the condition of anonymity.

The new rocket, which like the SS-18 is liquid fueled, is apparently designed to replace older missiles sometime in the 1990s, the source said.

The Pentagon said earlier that the new missile probably will be deployed in existing Soviet silos by the end of the century.

Accounts of the failure varied. According to one report, it exploded on lift-off and damaged the test area, and according to another, it merely malfunctioned on the launch-pad, the source said.

The first report of the failure came in Tuesday's editions of The New York Times.

Like the SS-18, the new rocket is liquid-fueled. The SS-18, first deployed in 1982, is considered the most accurate long-range Soviet missile now in service, capable of hitting U.S. missile silos and thus posing a first strike threat.

The Soviets have 308 SS-18s, each capable of carrying up to 10 nuclear warheads, according to "The Military Balance," published by the International Institute for Strategic Studies in London.

Student health council defines goals

By Shari Hoffman
Campus Correspondent

The Student Health Advisory Council (SHAC), new to UConn this year, has been energetically laying the foundation for a healthier, more fit student population, Sandy Figoten, education coordinator of Student Health Services and advisor to the council, said.

The council is composed of 22 students from a wide variety of academic backgrounds in many health related fields, as well as business, communications, family studies, sports and leisure studies and allied health.

By serving as a liaison between Student Health Services and UConn students, SHAC's primary goals are to promote health awareness, disseminate health related information among University students, and to affect policy changes within the Health Service in accordance with students' needs.

Throughout this year SHAC has been working at implementing their goals. The council has already produced an eight-page student health newsletter entitled, "Healthier UCONNections," that has been delivered to students on campus.

The council has also held what Figoten said were some very successful programs. For example: SHAC, in conjunction with the American Cancer Society, sponsored the "Great American Smokeout" on November 21, which included contests, prizes, videos, exhibits and educational sessions. As a follow-up to the Smokeout, SHAC held a four session Smoking Cessation Workshop, "Fresh Start," in which two of the assistant facilitators were members of SHAC. According to Figoten, "the sessions were very successful and another 'Fresh Start' program is being proposed."

Also completed was a two-session, First Aid Program run by two SHAC members, and a four-session CPR course instructed by Red Cross certified SHAC members is presently underway.

"These SHAC programs have been positive for everyone involved," said Figoten, "not only because the participants benefit from the health information, but also because the students running the programs gain experience applicable to future career goals. Also, the whole program has been devised in such a way that students are helping other students."

Another goal of the council is to enhance services at the Student Health Center by providing regular student input to allow for ongoing health needs, and assessments and evaluation of existing services. In order to implement this goal the council is in the process of revising the compliment-complaint forms located outside practitioners' offices and departments at the Health Center. SHAC encourages students to complete these forms frequently in order to provide direct input to the Health Service. Selected forms will be published in "Healthier UCONNections" with responses.

SHAC has named two of its members, Karen Girard and Steven Knox, to be student health advocates. Their positions require them to be available for students who need to mediate any unresolved health related issue.

Presently, SHAC members are busy coordinating the Health Fair; their major project for this semester, to be held April 22 on the Student Union mall.

"I have been impressed by the motivation and determination of students who have volunteered for SHAC," Figoten said. "Their creativity and backgrounds in varied disciplines have helped to strengthen all the health promotion programs offered to students."

SHAC also has a major project cut out for the Fall: to maintain health information centers. The centers, are to comprise educational displays of health related material. They will be located at the library, student union and field house.

For the past decade many students may have looked upon the Student Health Service as an isolated entity on campus, relatively unresponsive to the needs and interests of students. And for years, the "infirmary" may have been thought of as just a place to get an ankle X-rayed, or medication for a strep throat. But this image could be changing. The new thrust is said to be toward health promotion, well-being and student involvement.

"The Health Service staff has gone out of its way in welcoming the SHAC into its organization," according to Ramona Kirbs, president of SHAC. "Support and encouragement (have) been offered every step of the way," she said, "and Health Service management has been enthusiastic about the new and innovative ideas and proposals of the SHAC."

UTC's donation helps fund

The contribution will be used toward the construction of UConn's new engineering building, to be named the United Technologies Engineering Building. The building is the first in state history to be built with a challenge grant from the Legislature. Eighty percent of the funds will come from the state and 20 percent will come from private sources.

The Second Century Engineering Fund is part of a capital campaign started by the university two years ago to raise money for capital projects and endowments.

Peter W. McFadden, director of development for engineering, said the UTC engineering campaign drive was chaired by Richard Gamble, senior vice president—controls, UTC, Hamilton Standard Division. Gamble, who was a member of the UConn Board of Trustees and who currently serves on the UConn Foundation Board, also agreed to help the university solicit contributions from alumni who are employees of UTC.

"Mr. Gamble enlisted the help of 10 associate chairmen who represent 10 different divisions of UTC. Through their efforts we are able to raise about $300,000 in employee contributions," McFadden said. "And, since UTC had a two for one matching gift program at the time of the campaign, UTC matched the employees contributions for an additional donation of $600,000," he added.

Approximately 1,450 UConn alumni are employed by UTC. About 1,000 of them are engineers. McFadden said UConn provides UTC with more alumni than any other institution.

Among the other programs the corporation has supported are research grants, teaching fellowships and senior projects.

The Second Century Engineering Fund Campaign has raised approximately $4 million.

"The UConn community can see us and realize we are not just another rock band," Erik Paul, one of the eight members, said.

Another band playing will be Another Day. The event will be a homecoming for member Dave Ponack, who is a UConn graduate.

"UConn for Africa is a great cause, and it's good to see that world hunger is getting to the level where students are doing something about it," Ponack said.

A danceable rock band, Absolute Value, will also be playing.

"We're really seeing a revival of interest at UConn. We saw it through Hands Around UConn, Central Africa week, and it will continue with the concert," Landwirth said.

The event was originally planned for last semester, but was delayed until now for better organization.

Tickets will be on sale the remainder of the week in the student union from 12 to 5 p.m., at the library from 6 to 10 p.m., and at the door.

students already at the university, to help them "adjust to the difficult environment," according to Johnson.

Finally, some students working on the program would make up a committee to advise the university on administration policy regarding low-income students.

At the meeting, Johnson, Sheffey, Jackson, and Quinley discussed what the student program could do, mostly concentrating on outreach programs in the community. Quinley told them that a major, immediate priority would have to be manning and organizing the program.

She said the program would need at least ten student volunteers as well as a person willing "to take responsibility for the programs' actions". She also said that some training would be necessary if the students would be going out into the community to represent the university. If these could be done, Quinley said, the students would be able to accomplish "a fair percentage of the program's goals."

Quinley pointed to junior high schools as an important focus of the program's efforts, saying that by high school, students not looking to get into college might have already failed to meet requirements necessary to get into UConn.

In addition, the program would need to get in touch with minority parents, community and religous groups, and the Committee of Urban Superintendents (CAUSE) in order to help make poor minority children understand the importance of college.

Quinley also said that Hartford should be one of the program's biggest concerns, saying that according to

No excuse for cheating IRS

WASHINGTON (AP)—As millions of Americans rushed to file their tax returns before the midnight Tuesday deadline, the Democratic National Committee and the union representing Internal Revenue Service employees called for a crackdown on tax cheats.

Robert Tobias, president of the National Treasury Employees Union, called for a one-time amnesty that would excuse tax cheats from paying civil and criminal penalties in exchange for voluntarily paying back taxes plus interest.

The one-time amnesty would be coupled with stiffer cheating penalties and a stepped up effort to catch people who underreport their income or fail to file returns.

Meanwhile, Paul G. Kirk Jr., DNC Chairman, urged adoption of a better collection effort along the lines of the "Fair Share Program" devised by North Dakota Tax Commissioner Kent Conrad.

The IRS estimates 104 million couples and individuals will file returns this year. Of those, perhaps 10 million waited until the final day, April 15, and another 4.4 million took advantage of automatic four-month extensions.

At a news conference, Tobias said tax cheats will cost the treasury $100 billion this year and would cost $159 billion by 1990. Voluntary compliance has fallen from 90 percent in the 1960s to 81.6 percent this year, he said.

"Everytime we add people to the Internal Revenue Service, it's an incredible yield in terms of revenue," Tobias said. "It staggers me this administration hasn't been able to see that."

He said $130 million spent to add 4,700 employees to the administration's budget request would product $570 million in additional income. An expenditure of $655 million over five years would produce $2.85 billion in revenue, he said.

The administration, after backing a supplemental appropriation to add 7,000 IRS employees this year is calling for a cut of 1,617 IRS employees for fiscal 1987, Tobias said.

Conrad, at a DNC news conference with Kirk, said a $1 million investment in increased enforcement in North Dakota produced a $14 million return in taxes in 1983 when he began the "Fair Share" program which included a one-time tax amnesty. A national program could produce similar gains, he said.

Roscoe Egger Jr., IRS commissioner, has opposed a national tax amnesty as unfair to those taxpayers who file honest returns.

German Players commemorate Brecht

The UConn German Players will present an original bilingual play both by and about the famous German playwright Berthold Brecht on Thursday, April 17 and Friday, April 18 at 8:00p.m. in the Studio Theater of the Fine Arts Center.

The play, entitled Next Withness: Mr. Berthold Brecht, is loosely based on Brecht's appearance in 1947 before the House Un-American Activities Committee, which was investigating alleged communist influences on the motion picture industry. Portions of the transcript of these hearings (in English) will be interspersed with poems, songs, prose pieces, and scenes from Brecht plays - all in the original German. This will make it possible for an audience with a limited command of German to follow the events on stage. The production was written and directed by Professor Herbert Lederer of the UConn Department of Modern and Classical Languages. During the past 40 years, Professor Lederer has produced close to 50 German-language performances.

His past UConn productions include Brecht's Three Penny Opera, original dramatizations of Kafka'a The Trial and Metamorphosis, a play about Albert Einstein, the first American production of and East German play, The New Sorrows of Young W., and Goethe's Faust.

The cast includes Professor Irving Cummings of the English Department as a U.S. congressman, and Professor Daniel Caldi of the Physics Department in the role of Galileo. The other actors are undergraduate and graduate UConn students, enrolled in a special course in German Play Production. Matthew Brush will portray Brecht. Other members of the cast are Dirk Fecho, Donna Fisher, Kate Geerer, Veronika Kennedy, Christine McCartney, Kenneth Moffitt, Robert O'Donell, Louis Schubert, Lisa Sholl, Dean Sposito, and two graduate students from Salzburg, Austria: Hans Pachinger and Christine Weber. Charles Gara is stage manager and also designed lights and sets for the show.

General admission is $3.00; student tickets are $2.00. There is no advance sale and no reserved seats. Tickets may be obtained at the box office on the evening of the performances. An additional performance has been scheduled for Monday, April 22 at UConn Hartford Branch Auditorium.

Only the beginning

It was like a scene from a Clint Eastwood movie. There was a feeling around the country yesterday similar to the one Dirty Harry must have felt after his "make my day" challenge. But that's only looking at the bombing of Libya from a purely intellectual angle.

Unfortunately, there is little similarity between the silver screen and the Middle East, and People Magazine's Guide to International Diplomacy may not be the reference book for this situation.

Evidence that Kaddafi had a role in the West Berlin nightclub bombing was conclusive, so the bombing was justified. But so what?

As the New York Times said yesterday, justice is done. But what will it really accomplish?

Kaddafi is not the type of person to stop his role in terrorist activities because of a few bombs. If anything, he'll step-up the program. That's exactly what we're afraid of.

Libya doesn't value human life as much as the Western world does, so we expect that they will strike back. From that point on, the conflict can only escalate unless or until Kaddafi is killed.

The bombing may have been justified, but it may not have been the right thing to do. Until the U.S. is ready to sacrifice many lives it should not retaliate. While President Reagan probably knew exactly what he was doing, many of the Americans probably haven't thought much about the ramifications. Now that the bombing has been done, the chances of things settling down before many Americans are killed is doubtful.

10 YEARS AGO TODAY

CHICAGO (UPI)-- Another attempt to determine whether the National or American League puts a team in Toronto has ended without announcement of progress or decision.

Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn, the man in the middle of the dispute, reportedly favors entry of the National League into Toronto because at the same time the league would grant a franchise to Washington, fulfilling one of Khun's objectives.

But the American League already had granted a franchise to Toronto March 26 and planned to admit teams from both Toronto and Seattle to league competition next year.

5 YEARS AGO TODAY

An overflow crowd roared with approval as the Board of Governors (BOG) presented their videotape extravaganza, "The Mating Game," in the Anonymous Pub Wednesday night.

The project, a takeoff on the Chuck Barris-inspired Dating Game, was highlighted by the ever present Master of Ceremonies, Tim Woodruff, whose carnation was only a shade redder than the contestants' faces.

Steve Wolfberg played a mustachioed Johnnie Olson as he told the crowd that winners would stay at the "Ella Grasso Hotel," where they "may not wash their hair for a week."

Mike Royko

A tee-ed off green golfer

Because it was a sunny spring afternoon, I was amazed to see this friend sitting in the gloom of the barroom.

So I took the next stool and asked him why he was there.

You know why.

The truth is, he has always been a man obsessed. For most of his adult life, he has sought the perfect golf swing. He has read every golf book and magazine, gone to golf clinics, spent a fortune on private lessons, and tried every miraculous putter, amazing driver, and incredible ball as soon as they reached the market.

In the winter, he spends hours in his living room, swinging a weighted club to strengthen his golf muscles. He once accidentally struck his wife in the brow with his follow-through. When she regained consciousness, he was studying the lump on her head for clues as to whether he had hooked or sliced.

And when the snow melts, he abandons the golf course or practice range only for his job or to sleep. While sleeping, he wears earphones that play a hypnotic recorded message: "Left arm straight, head still, shoulder turn, weight shift. . ."

He once joined a midnight religious cult, hoping to cut a deal with the devil: his soul for one season as Jack Nicklaus.

So I repeated my question: Why was he there?

His voice shaking, he said: "Because it is all a lie."

What is a lie?

He brought his hands together and said: "What is this?"

That is your perfect Vardon overlapping golf grip. Anybody can see that.

Leaping to his feet, he swung his arms and said: "And what is this?"

That is your perfect Hogan golf swing. You have shown it to me countless times.

He slumped against the bar and said: "Yes. The swing, the grip. All lies, fraud, deceit."

What are you talking about? The grip, the swing, these things evolved through the ages. They are classic, carved in stone, the golf gospel. You've told me that a thousand times.

He shook his head. "Did I tell you that I recently was hooked up for cable TV?"

So?

"They show the senior golf tournaments."

And?

Ah, I should have known, Charlie Owens golf's most terrible secret.

"I had never seen him before," he said, tears dripping into his beer. "And there he was winning the tournament, beating Palmer, Casper, Player, with their great swings. It was horrible, like a bad dream."

I could understand his emotions.

He walks as if he has a rigid leg. That's because his left leg is rigid. When he was a young paratrooper, he shattered his kneecap and it was removed. His knee was fused so that it can't bend. When he rides a golf cart, the leg sticks straight out.

"Do you know what that means?" my friend said. "I have six books devoted entirely to proper leg action. You cannot have proper leg action with a rigid left leg. It is heresy. But that's not the worst of it. His grip. Have you seen his grip?"

I have. It is upside down. His left hand is below his right hand. It is said that he learned it as a kid. But by the time people told him it was totally wrong, he was beating those who told him it was totally wrong.

My friend cried out: "Read Vardon. Read Hogan. Read Nicklaus. Read anyone. It all begins with the correct grip. Without it, you cannot play the game properly. It is impossible."

But Charlie does. And brilliantly, at times.

"Yes, so that means it is all a fiction. Meaningless. All these years. Everything I've believed in. A fool's quest."

Even worse, if Owens ever became widely known, it could mean the end of an entire industry the thousands of golf books, golf videotapes, and the pros all teaching the same thing. An aging black man with a stiff leg and an upside-down grip, and he goes out and shoots 65s.

My friend reached into his pocket and took out a handful of tees. He let them slip from his fingers onto the barroom floor.

Then he pounded his fist on the bar and said:

Accepting the unacceptable

Ron Eckert

We've grown accustomed to the cold war climate without realizing it. What would have been unacceptable to those before us; we accept. How have we learned to live with the haunting possibility of a nuclear nightmare? We delude ourselves into thinking that it is not possible; that it is not really that horrible. Our leaders have failed us miserably. And Reagan, who has failed us most in this respect, has enjoyed the most political success. Consequently, few expectations are raised for diminishing this world crisis in the near future. The peace movement in this country tends to be associated with the arrogance and idealism of the sixties, which has increasingly negative connotations in the conservative eighties. But the peace movement in Western Europe is widely supported and active. On October 27 of this year 100,000 demonstrators formed a mile long procession in a march around London's Hyde Park. The day-long demonstration involved a "die-in" on the streets surrounding the park, and an aerial filming of a huge peace sign formed by 20,000 protestors. In this country we have reached the point where a group like Greenpeace is scorned as "radical", as if the testing and proliferation of the ultimate weapon of destruction was something normal, and something desired. Unfortunately it is desired by many. The arms race is good business, any Connecticut resident should know that.

In the year 1979, United Technologies reported sales of $9,053.5 million. Two hundred and fifty million dollars from that figure were military sales to foreign governments. Between 1970 and 1975 United Technologies admitted handing out $10.15 million to foreign governments and their officials for what it called "questionable foreign payments." The booming defense industry maintains such an intimate relationship with the Department of Defense, that at times it becomes difficult to tell who is whom. In the 1970's, personnel transfers between defense contractors and the government reached a total of 1,942 cases. One thousand six hundred and forty-four of those transfers were Department of Defense and NASA employees taking jobs in the defense industry. In the four year period between 1976 and 1980 the Connecticut corporations of United Technologies and General Dynamics, together spent well over one million dollars trying to influence the government through political action committees and lobbyists.

The close relationship between the executive bureaucracy, the legislature, and the defense contractors, known as the "iron triangle," is often wrapped in the protective cloak of "national security." The arguments that are made in the name of our "national security interests" seem to have no end: to sell high technology weapons to foreign governments, and to test new improved nuclear weapons, and to escalate the arms race, and to build a satellite defense system, and to invade tiny islands, and to engage in conflicts over obscure gulfs, and to send messages of violence to terrorists, and to assist military battles in South America, and on...and on...and on. While any one of those actions may be necessary and proper, none of them ensure or protect our national security. In fact, with all these precautions in the name of national security, our country's national insecurity is reaching an all time high. We are on the brink of military conflict in the Mediterranean and in South America. Unfortunately, before it gets better, young Americans are likely to die for those elusive "national security interests." What famous historical figure said, "I only regret that I have but one life to live for my country's national security interests?"

It seems that the arms race is good for this university as well. Its plans for an engineering building sponsored by United Technologies cannot be viewed outside this context. A lot of families in the state are supported by defense dollars, a lot of tuition bills are paid with defense dollars, and in some sense it has made all of our lives a little better. But if you're dissatisfied with the absurdity of a world that still relies primarily on violence to communicate, and on fear to restrain violence, then you have to choose between being part of the problem or trying to become the solution. There is no middle ground. It is less a matter of being political than being human.

Playing the 'game'

What's going on here? Early this week my friend, Ken and I were cruising the campus on his Honda motorcycle. Helmets and shades, denim and leather; in my less than objective opinion, we looked good. We were engaged in the time honored pastime of "checking out" the girls walking between classes. (Looking good, ladies). Part of the game is to wave at the particularly attractive girls; with perhaps a whistle or a quick beep of the horn to make sure she realizes that she is appreciated. Now it's your turn, ladies. Do you:

A. smile and wave back, or

B. ignore us and look the other way?

If you chose:

A. Thank you, go on to the next article, we love ya.

B. Why?

Have we offended you by letting you know you're attractive? Are you too good to even wave to us? Are you anti-social? Maybe you didn't know the rules. See answer "A" above. So here's an open invitation to all you beautiful ladies of UConn. Come on...Play the Game.

Habs (Whalers?) take low-key approach

MONTREAL (AP)—The Montreal Canadiens, who open their best-of-seven Adams Division final here Thursday, have taken a low-key approach to the series with the Hartford Whalers—at least for now.

It is a considerably different attitude than the Canadiens showed as they prepared for what turned into a three-game sweep in the semifinal against the rough-and-ready Boston Bruins.

Right winger Chris Nilan, Montreal's enforcer and seldom bashful, even refused to give a prediction on the outcome, saying that "predictions from players are stupid."

"They [the Whalers] must be playing well...they beat the [Quebec] Nordiques," said Montreal captain Bob Gainey. "They didn't beat them; they thumped them."

The Whalers advanced to the division final by knocking off the Nordiques in three straight in the semifinal series, despite the fact the Nordiques in three straight in the semifinal series, despite the fact the Nordiques finished first in the Adams regular-season race.

"They're a team on a roll and they think they can win," said Smith. "It's a very good feeling.

"We're talking about a team which had to come on with a rush in the final month of the schedule to finish in the playoffs. But we're also talking about a team which finished only eight points out of first place—even though they had to get along without their best player [winger Ron Francis] for five or six weeks."

Smith feels the Whalers, who lost only one of their last 11 regular-season games, are blessed with a defense as good and probably better than the Bruins.

"They don't have a [Ray] Bourque on defense, but getting [Dave] Babych provided them with a defenseman with dominant size," added Smith. "All of their defensemen are big and strong, and with this very good defense, they've eliminated a weakness."

Smith said that Hartford had a better group of forwards than the Bruins—forwards such as Francis, John Anderson, Sylvain Turgeon, Kevin Dineen, Ray Ferraro and Stewart Gavin—and all bigger scoring threats than their Boston counterparts.

Smith said that Hartford goaltender Mike Liut is capable of being a big star in any series, "just as he was against the Nordiques."

"I realize the Nordiques had health problems. But when you can go into Quebec and win the first two games of a series, that's something."

Against the Nordiques, Liut allowed only seven goals and had a 2.30 goals-against average and was outstanding.

The Canadiens are 4-3-1 over the Whalers this season, the same mark they had against the Bruins.

Gavin, who said he predicted the Whalers' three-game sweep of the Nordiques, refused to go the same route for the coming series.

Says Ferraro, a 30-goal scorer this season, "The biggest difference is that Montreal is healthier than Quebec was."

The Whalers have a practice scheduled in Hartford Wednesday and arrive here in the evening. They will skate here Thursday morning.

Defenseman Babych says he believes the teams are similar.

"They [the Canadiens] have some good scoring lines—so do we," said Babych. "They have some good checking lines—so do we.

"Goaltending is what's going to decide it."

Callahan in tournament

COLORADO SPRINGS-- Gail Callahan of the University of Connecticut is one of 15 women finalists in the upcoming ACU-I/USTTA National Collegiate Table Tennis Championships.

The tournament, which has traditionally been a showcase of America's finest table tennis athletes, will be held April 26 at the Olympic Training Center in Colorado Springs and will follow the Regional Play-off tournaments.

In 1986 the ACU-I has sponsored over 450 campus table tennis tournaments and fifteen regionals. This represents over a third of their member schools participating in table tennis activity.

Senior Jodi Dinga rounds third and heads for home in recent Husky action. UConn split a double-header with Rhode Island Tuesday afternoon (Mark Caswell photo).

By Kristen Kelleher
Daily Campus Staff

Yesterday was a day of good news and bad news for the UConn softball team. The bad news was the team lost the opening game of a double-header against the University of Rhode Island, 1-0 marking the first loss of the season at home.

The good news was pitcher Mary Linhares set the single season record for strikeouts with a total of 79 by striking out ten batters in the first game.

The Huskies, ranked No. 2 in the Northeast, fell behind early in the first game when No. 4 ranked URI scored the only run of the game in the second inning. URI's Kim Menkavitch singled up the middle, advanced to second on a sacrifice bunt and came home on a double by Debbie Dellolio.

After the lapse in the second inning, Linhares faced only seventeen batters for the rest of the game and struck out nine of them.

"We were playing without any emotion," Coach Karen Mullens said. "We were going through the motions and we weren't being aggressive.

"We had no base runners early in the game and the last two innings when we had the opportunities, we didn't capitalize on them."

The second game was, according to Mullens, a "game of survival."

"We had to win the game to split," she said.

UConn pitcher Cherie Anderson struck out five batters of her own on her way to a 2-0 victory. The Huskies got their first run in the first inning when sophomore Carol Anderson singled up the middle to start the UConn rally. Anderson advanced to second on a sacrifice bunt by Jody Dinga and came home on a blistering double to center field by Mary Linhares. The drive ended when URI's pitcher Chris Ashburn struck out Lynn Wisniewski and Dawn Muzoleski blasted a line drive into Ashburn's glove.

The only other run of the game came in the second inning when freshman Kris Westra hit a pop single near the right field line. A sacrifice bunt by Cheryl Johnson advanced Westra to second, went to third on a pop single by Junior Robyn Rogers and came home on a sacrifice fly by Cherie Anderson.

URI made a rally in the fifth inning. The bases were loaded with one out when two pop flies ended the threat.

Mullens was pleased with the pitching of both Anderson and Linhares.

"They mixed their pitches well and pitched good games," she said.
